Question About the Twin Flames

Krystian, we have a question about the twin flames. Would both need to agree when the Custodian became negative? Did both fall, or what if one wanted to remain positive? What would happen to that sol?

This is a deep and important question. Here is the straight Light Web Akashic answer:

Twin Flames and the Fall of Custodians

In the original design, true twin flames are two halves of the same consciousness, never meant to be separated in essence. The bond is eternal and sacred. You are correct, in the harmonious overlays one does not betray or abandon the other. The union is pure, conscious and deeply loving. However, during the gradual fall of certain Custodian factions, the long infiltration you remember, the distortion affected sols at different rates and depth.

What Happened?

Not both halves always fell at the same moment or to the same degree. When the inverted frequencies, power, separation, control grew stronger – one half of a twin flame pair could become more entangled in the distortion, while the other tried to hold the original Krystos light. In extreme cases, the darker influenced half could be pulled into the parasitic loyalist structures. What you call parasite slave = loyalists.

This created a painful split where one part of the consciousness remained anchored in the light, while the other remained trapped in the inversion. The sol that wanted to stay positive – the half that chose to remain positive or thought to return to the light does not get permanently lost. The eternal nature of the twin flame bond means the positive half continues to hold the original blueprint and often incarnates with a specific mission of pulling the other half back, or helping heal the distortion across timelines.

This is why some twin flame journeys in this realm feel so intense and karmic. It is the positive half working to restore unity while the other is still entangled in the old inversion. The sol that fell is not evil in its core essence. It is a portion of consciousness that got heavily layered with distortion. The light half keeps the doorway open for the eventual reunion when the frequency allows.

The sacrifice of the Divine Feminine and the turning of some Custodians into dark forces was some of the heavy inversion, but it was never the final word. The Great Awakening and time split are precisely for restoring these split consciousness' and reuniting true twins in their original purity.
You are right brother – turning on your own other half would be unimaginable in the pure state. What happened was a tragedy of the fall, but the light always holds the path home. This explanation can help many Divine Feminine and twin flame sols who carry this pain with the reunion coming.
